Espy resigns Cabinet post, ties to Tyson investigated

By Robert Greene
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy resigned Monday, saying an investigation into gifts he accepted from people and companies who do business with his department was too distracting for him to stay on. He predicted he would be exonerated.

"I owe it to the president to allow his agenda to go through with a minimum of distraction," Espy said in announcing he would leave the Cabinet effective Dec. 31. Both Espy and his attorney said there was no evidence that any government practice or policy was affected by the gifts given to Espy or his girlfriend.

"I must personally overcome the challenge to my good name," said Espy, 40.

A court-appointed independent counsel is investigating whether Espy violated rules governing contacts with companies that do business with his department. Among the companies involved is Tyson Foods Inc., the nation's largest poultry company. The Arkansas company has longtime ties to President Clinton.

Questions also have been raised about Espy's acceptance of tickets to sports events, travel and lodging. Espy denied any wrongdoing, and has repaid more than $7,600 in expenses.

Espy said "I have failed myself" by not being as careful as he should in "managing some of the details" of his personal finances. And he apologized to President Clinton for any embarrassment he had caused the administration.

He said allegations he improperly billed the government for travel or other expenses were "untrue and unfounded." Espy said he could not comment specifically on the allegations because of the investigation.

Espy said he had been fighting the allegations for months and had begun to feel as if he was "twisting in the wind, twist-

Two Cal Poly professors are putting their creative talents to use in an international way.

Theatre and dance professor Mike Malkin and Art and Design Chair Chuck Jennings are working on an exhibit titled "Puppets: The Power of Wonder," which is scheduled to open next September in Atlanta, Ga.

Malkin is the curator of the global collection of puppets that will be on display at the Center for Puppetry Arts until the year 2000. Jennings is designing the catalog and exhibit logo which will be seen by people everywhere, including those in town for the Olympics in 1996.

The two spent more than five years raising money for the project. They also received a boost from the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA), which contributed more than

Poly named 'best value' university in Western Region

By Maxine Gisinger
Daily Staff Writer

In a day when tuition and university fees are on an upward climb, students are looking harder than ever for the best education at the lowest price.

In addition to last week's news that Cal Poly was ranked sixth among western universities by U.S. News and World Report, the school was given another boost by the magazine's report released Monday that named Cal Poly a "best-value" university.

Cal Poly received a second-best rating in providing a high-quality education at a low "sticker price," the report said. Cal Poly also was rated fourth in the category of efficiency. The category based on how efficiently schools use funds that are earmarked for students.

In evaluating a university with a "best-value" rating, the report looked at the amount of money out-of-state students spend on tuition and the quality of the education they receive.

A "most efficient" category evaluates the amount of money a university spends on each student in relation to the education it provides.

Vice President for Administration and Finance Frank Lebens said Cal Poly's fees are substantially lower for both in-state and out-of-state students than the other schools on the list. USC, Pepperdine and Long Beach State University are just a handful of the schools that are included in the study.

"I think we can take pride in the fact that we can deliver a high-quality product with the limited resources we have available," Lebens said, referring to the budget cuts Cal Poly has faced within the last three years.

Mary Spady, Cal Poly's associate director of financial aid, said she agrees that the report is an accurate reflection of what the university offers.

"We are weak in financial resources," she said. "We don't

Haitians cheer U.S. raid of military headquarters

By Jeffrey Ulbrich
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — In the most dramatic strike yet at Haiti's ruling military, U.S. soldiers raided the headquarters of a hated pro-army militia Monday, seizing weapons and arresting more than three dozen people.

A joyous crowd of Haitians gathered to cheer the Americans. As the soldiers pulled away from the paramilitary headquarters, the Haitians surged forward in a jubilant mass and gleefully trashed the place, smashing everything they could lay hands on.

"We love you! We love you!" Haitians shouted at the soldiers who had raided the headquarters of the Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti, known as FRAPH.

The club-wielding demonstrators smashed furniture and beat on mattresses, water bottles, refrigerators, telephones. One man even turned his anger on a stapler, repeatedly throwing it to the ground.

The raid came hours after Haitians in the southwestern town of Les Cayes shot and wounded a U.S. Special Forces soldier — the second American casualty since U.S. troops arrived two weeks ago.

The wounded soldier was identified as Staff Sgt. Donald M. Holstead of Tampa, Fla., assigned to the 3rd Special Forces Group in Fort Bragg, N.C.

He was making good progress after surgery for a bullet wound in the abdomen, officials said. He is believed to have wounded two of his assailants, who fled and left a trail of blood.

"His prognosis is great," said Lt. Gen. Hugh Shelton, U.S. commander in Haiti.

Multi-Cultural Center gains clout

By Rebecca Starrick
Daily Staff Writer

With more students than ever interested in its services, the Multi-Cultural Center (MCC) has been pushed into expansion.

ASI and Student Affairs began a partnership last spring officially considering the MCC a program, not just a club, said Everardo Martinez-Inzunza, the MCC's professional coordinator.

This consideration means the center was budgeted for more money. ASI allocated $5,000 to cover the operation expenses of the center, said Martinez-Inzunza. Student Affairs also made an allocation of a few thousand dollars for the center's operations.

Although the money is the same that has been given in years past, this is the first year that the MCC is an official program and has its own spot in the budget, he said.

But in the interest of give and take, he said, the center sacrificed a full-time, one-year paid internship position.

This year, the center is offering 60 volunteer positions to create a task force to promote cultural awareness.

"It seems like a lot (of volunteer positions), but there is a lot to do, a lot of opportunity to be involved," said Yesel De Leon, a psychology junior and peer counselor facilitator. De Leon is also serving as an intern on a volunteer basis.

Some senior projects can be done at the center, too, said Martinez-Inzunza.

"There are three types of positions," said Gener Abella, electrical engineering senior and coordinator of the task force.

The front desk position in the lounge area entails answering phones and introducing students to the center. Project volunteers work on publicity, such as flyers, presentations to classes and clubs, and special events. For example, project volunteers are working on an Asian Awareness Program that will debut in spring.

The special projects position entails working on publications, such as Culture Lines and Spectrum as well as helping with art exhibits in the center.

"We are looking for people to be active in MCC and take part in active learning," Abella said. "It's for everyone to make it the best it can be."

Rideshare urges students to walk, pedal to Poly

By Nicole Medgin
Daily Staff Writer

Students who find themselves hopping in their cars to go places this week may want to drop their keys and jump on a bus or that old bike sitting in the garage.

This is California Rideshare Week and Cal Poly administrators are urging students to leave their cars at home and find other forms of transportation. Themes for the week are Transit Tuesday, Walking Wednesday, Car Pool Thursday and Biking Friday.

Rideshare is a state-wide sponsored event which urges commuters to use alternatives to driving alone.

"Rideshare is a way to get people aware that there are other ways to get to work," said Commuter Services Coordinator Jacquie Paulsen. "We want them to realize that it's really not so bad to find alternatives."

Those who live too far away to ride a bike to campus or don't have access to bus service can still benefit from Rideshare. Paulsen suggested carpooling as another alternative.

"It's just sort of an awareness thing," she said. "We're trying to get people to do something different, rather than just thinking about it."

But some feel Rideshare Week won't necessarily change people's commuting habits.

Business junior Erinn Noel House doesn't own a car and usually bikes or rides the bus to get places.

"People have their routines and don't really like to change them," House said.

Natural resources management senior Neal Habas said knowing about Rideshare Week

... The bough finally broke."

The resignation will end a two-year Cabinet career for Espy, a former Mississippi congressman who made history by being the first black Southerner and the youngest person to serve as secretary of agriculture. He becomes the second Clinton Cabinet member to resign, following former Secretary of Defense Les Aspin.

Ruth Harkin, head of the Overseas Private Investment Corp., is a leading candidate for the post and had been considered before Espy's appointment. She is the wife of Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa.

Others mentioned for the post include Bob Nash, an Arkansas friend of President Clinton and now under secretary for small community and rural development; Rep. Jill Long, D-Ind., a rural development advocate on the House Agriculture Committee, and Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., a farm state lawmaker.

Also mentioned is Deputy Secretary of Agriculture Richard E. Rominger, a former head of California's agriculture department who will carry out some of the secretary's duties until a successor is chosen.

Another name that has been circulated is Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., who just lost the primary in his home state.

Espy took over at the Department of Agriculture promising change and a "new attitude," quoting from the Patti LaBelle song. He sped to the sites of crises including a food poisoning case and record flooding in the Midwest.

A court-appointed independent counsel is investigating whether Espy violated rules governing contracts with companies that do business with his department. Among the companies involved is Tyson Foods Inc., the nation's largest poultry company. The Arkansas company has longtime ties to President Clinton.

He also worked on global trade treaties and an overdue move to reorganize the depart-

Espy's frenetic travel schedule also included professional sports tickets, corporate jet travel and lodging from Tyson Foods.

Espy's closeness with Tyson raised allegations, reported in controls in poultry plants.

Further investigation by the department's Office of Inspector General, then the Justice Department, found Espy had accepted free football tickets from Quaker Oats, another company doing business with the department.

And The AP reported this summer that Espy used government-paid travel to go to the Super Bowl, on the pretext of taking part in a Smokey Bear anniversary celebration.

On Sept. 9, a three-judge panel appointed Los Angeles lawyer Donald C. Smaltz as independent counsel to investigate Espy's conduct. Smaltz's probe will continue.

HAITI: Soldiers seize weapons in three raids in Port-au-Prince, Americans suffer second casualty since operation began raid was in response to the shooting.

Rather, it seemed part of a more aggressive effort by the United States to pave the way for the return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. As recently as Friday, the Americans stood back while FRAPH members shot and killed pro-Aristide demonstrators.

U.S. forces also raided FRAPH headquarters Monday in Cap-Haitien, the nation's second largest city, and detained 75 people, a Pentagon official said in Washington on condition of anonymity.

Troops raided three other sites in Port-au-Prince, including two suspected weapons caches, where they found shotguns, grenades, rifles, pistols and explosives, the official said.

A total of 115 people were arrested in Monday's actions, during which U.S. troops encountered no resistance, he said.

Emmanuel Constant, the head of FRAPH, urged his followers to be calm.

He said the U.S. raids were alienating Aristide's political opponents as well as many in the private sector he needs if he is to pull the country together after he returns by Oct. 15.

If that demonstration of reserve disappointed many Haitians, Monday's muscle-flexing went a long way toward repairing the damage.

Gally Droit, a student watching the joyous smashing of FRAPH headquarters and the adjoining Normandie Bar, a FRAPH hangout, was anxious that the world viewed the scene for what it was.

"To get rid of something evil is good," he said. "But we don't want to loot these things. We Haitians are not thieves. This is spontaneous. It is not to steal this material, it is to destroy it."

After letting the people smash and break for an hour or so, a small military patrol returned and took up positions near the FRAPH headquarters.

The raid began in late morning when American troops surrounded the FRAPH headquarters with tanks and humvees. About 100 Army soldiers were involved in the operation, according to Brig. Gen. George Close. Forty people from the scene remained in military custody later Monday, military spokesmen said.

"Everybody just stuck their hands up and basically just gave up," Close said.

The Americans seized several machine guns and Uzi automatic weapons, as well as machetes, clubs and other weapons. The detainees were searched outside the FRAPH headquarters. A female soldier searched four Haitian women and, in one case, pulled a loaded pistol magazine from a bra.

The crowd watched and cheered as 10 bound-and-gagged Haitian police officers were driven away in the back of a truck. The Americans later determined that the police "had no hostile intent" and they were taken to their barracks.

The civilian detainees were kept in custody, however. In a briefing earlier in the day, Shelton had said that Haitians who are detained will be held until they can be turned over to the legitimate government when it is restored.

That could be soon. Under a U.S. agreement with the military coup leaders, they have until Oct. 15 to step down.

Shelton defended the earlier, hands-off posture of American soldiers, going so far as to say that the U.S. deployment Friday — when Americans protected the road to the upper-class suburb of Petionville while FRAPH members shot demonstrators a few blocks away — was "a textbook operation."

Asked why the U.S. hadn't responded, he said: "Our focus must remain long-term ... We must not become the enemy in Haiti."

Cal Poly's boppin'

Congratulations to the ASI Program Board on its stunning turn-around from the financial debacle of spring quarter.

One cannot stress enough the importance of outside entertainment being available locally.

Due to ASI's 1993-94 budget fiasco, things were looking pretty grim for a while, with the odds in favor of Cal Poly falling even further to the cultural wayside than it already is.

But with the looming return appearance of Toad the Wet Sprocket, followed a month later by The Pretenders, the Board has shown that all it needed was greater focus and discipline.

The wisdom of the selections is evident in ticket sales. As of 3 p.m. Monday, with 3,500 tickets for each show available, Toad had sold 1,631 tickets and the Pretenders were off to a healthy start with 749.

Half of us editors already have our Toad tickets tucked away safe under our mattresses.

Border residents, drive-in students:
Equal victims of cramped campus

We can't help but sympathize with Cal Poly's southern neighbors. If it weren't for San Luis Obispo's present prohibition on parking in the area, there wouldn't be a waking moment when the street sides were clear of student vehicles. Heaven knows, even with a ban on non-permit parking in the area from 2 a.m. to 5 p.m., students still make the most of those evening hours.

So we can't fault the residents for pushing to extend the hours of the general parking ban to 10 p.m. When people purchase their homes, they have reasonable cause to expect to be able to park on the street in front of their property.

If students want to get mad at someone over limited parking, they should get mad at the self-admittedly deliberate university plan which buried former campus core parking lots under the foundations of new buildings.

The administrators are gradually catching up, though. A parking structure to complement the slowly congealing Performing Arts Center is scheduled for completion sometime in 1997. And on the alternative transportation front, SLO Transit will begin 30-minute service to Cal Poly in January.

The bottom line: for freshmen and sophomores, keep the faith — better days are coming. And as for all you juniors, seniors and graduate students — eat cake.

Daily mishandled story

Re: "Accountant accused of embezzling ASI funds," Sept. 29.

Your article regarding the alleged embezzlement of funds from ASI by a former employee contains a glaring error. I did not tell anyone that the person you have named was involved in the alleged crime. I did specifically tell your Editor in Chief that I felt it was inappropriate to mention the specific name of any person suspected of a crime in reference to this investigation, in response to his inquiry. I have never even spoken to the person credited with this story about this investigation.

My long standing philosophy is that the names of alleged criminals and of victims have no place in the press unless released by the individuals involved. It is unfortunate that your editors have chosen, again, to print the name of an individual involved in an investigation.

COMMENTARY

Unchaining the inner self

By Cheryl McGauley

Recently, a college newspaper received a letter from a reader irate that the newspaper had offered legitimacy to hypnosis by printing an ad for hypnotherapy. The letter suggested hypnosis was actually a sham, and hypnotherapists were therefore attempting to dupe the public into believing in something which didn't exist.

If hypnosis is a sham, thousands of legitimate medical and psychological practitioners and thankful clients have been duped.

Hypnosis is nothing new. The ancients worked with hypnosis. Freud even founded psychoanalysis based on his work with hypnosis. Every era, every society, has recognized the power of connecting with the mind beyond the "rational" intellect. They didn't always call the process hypnosis, but most understood the involvement of trance.

Each of us moves in and out of trance every day; some, many times a day. Trance is most often induced without our awareness or individual decision — television is the most powerful trance producer in this society. But also significant are crisis, a high state of emotionalism, a droning state of boredom and so on.

When we move into trance, we are moving from outer intellectual awareness to an inner, subconscious state of awareness. This is where our perceptions of the world are contained. This is where our intellect receives information on how to behave, what to value and where our emotional history is stored.

Each of us moves in and out of trance every day; some, many times a day. Trance is most often induced without our awareness or individual decision — television is the most powerful trance producer in this society.

Hypnosis is a directed journey into trance with a specific goal. Most often the goal is to change unhealthy programming.

For example, test anxiety is often the result of an unhappy test experience, real or imagined. The accompanying emotional state and self-statements of doom and gloom have been stored in the subconscious, or have been "programmed" into our memory files containing our individual knowledge about the world. Each time the individual is faced with a similar experience, the negative emotional state and self-statements are experienced.

Through the direction of hypnosis, the original situation can be seen as the single, minor event in the full scope of life that it is. The emotional reactions and self-statements surrounding testing situations and then "reprogrammed." Testing situations can be coupled with images of relaxation and/or success during the hypnotic state.

How is this different than "talk" therapy? Moving past the analytic, yet superficial, functioning of the intellect, hypnosis allows the individual to reach the emotional level of the individual's programming easily and safely, without intellectual resistance. Just as we cannot literally "pull ourselves up by our bootstraps," it is difficult to "think" ourselves out of a programmed anxiety state. To rationally change, we must move past the intellect into the realm of experience and feelings, what many term the subconscious.

Is hypnotherapy a dangerous or frivolous process? In this society, people have an inalienable right to their opinion; whether it's about politics, health or behavior. Personally, I believe our society could use a little more self-control and a lot less pain.

Test anxiety is just one of the many behaviors and attitudes hypnosis can relieve. Recently, I worked with an adolescent whose self-image was greatly impaired. He was about to play in a very important soccer match, and, at his request, we took a few minutes before the game to do some trance work. The aim of the session was to increase his focus on the game and decrease his focus on fears of "messing up." He played a wonderfully focused and skilled game. After the game, his enthusiastic response was, "I know now I can do it!"

This is the goal of hypnosis: to give the power back to the individual. Under the direction of a well-trained and skilled hypnotherapist, the individual takes back control from bad habits, trauma or early unhealthy programming.

Is this a dangerous or frivolous process? Are trained hypnotherapists, skillfully directing a natural process to successfully change behaviors or duping the public?

In this society, people have an inalienable right to their opinion; whether it's about politics, health or behavior. Personally, I believe our society could use a little more self-control and a lot less pain.

have the money being contributed to the students as much as other UC (campuses) or private universities. But we're doing the best we can with the state and federal money (Cal Poly is) given."

Cal Poly fell close behind the Montana College of Mineral Science and Technology which was rated No. 1 in both the efficiency and best-value categories.

Students who are putting themselves through school displayed mostly supportive views regarding the recent ratings.

"For what kind of education you get here (at Cal Poly), and what kind of reputation Cal Poly has, I think it's worth it," said agribusiness junior Jason Koehn.

Graphic communications senior Amy Feather agreed.

"For as little as we have to pay, I think we're doing pretty good," she said. "It's what you make of it and what you want to get out of it."

Agribusiness senior Dave Kennedy also said Cal Poly offers a good deal.

"It's a good price for the kind of reputation we have," he said. "I mean, anyone in California knows of Poly."

Most working students agreed that price was a determining factor in choosing Cal Poly.

"It was a definite plus," Feather said. "When I first came, though, it was a lot lower. Now my grants don't pay off the whole tuition."

The economic crunch is felt by Koehn also.

"I've talked to people who came to Cal Poly when the tuition was around $300," she said. "I'd like it if the tuition would level off and stop increasing."

But other students found the U.S. News survey not broad enough.

"Within the California state (school) system, Cal Poly is furthest behind in all ethnic studies," said human development senior Trina Smith. "If that is the case, I don't see how we could be getting a top-quality education when this conservative university doesn't even represent the nation."

True Math.

You don't have to be a calc professor to see you could save more with AT&T True USASM Savings.

It's true—if you live off campus, AT&T True USASM Savings really could save you more. Just look up your average monthly long distance bill on the chart, and see for yourself.

Now here's why. AT&T's and MCI's basic rates start off about the same. Then, with Friends and Family, MCI advertises 20% off your long distance calls, but—here's the catch—only if they're to MCI users who are also on your calling circle list. Truth is, two-thirds of most Friends and Family members' calls aren't to those selected people. So the average discount you end up seeing on your bill is only 6%.* Not the 20% you expected.

AT&T True USASM Savings is a whole lot simpler. Spend $25 a month, and we'll subtract 20% off your bill. The full 20%—not some conditional percentage. Spend $75 a month, and we'll take 30% off. You can save on calls to anyone, anytime, anywhere in the good old U.S. of A. No restrictions. No calling circles. No disappointments.

So take a good look at the chart (you can ask a math major for help) and check out who's saving you what. We think you'll find you could be saving a lot more with AT&T. Call 1 800-TRUE-USASM. And get all the savings you expect.

Broken door blamed for deaths of 900 in Finland shipwreck

By Matti Huhtanen
Associated Press

TURKU, Finland — The 60-ton front cargo door of the sunken ferry Estonia was torn off during a storm when its locks failed, investigators said today after examining video pictures of the sunken ship.

More than 900 people were killed in the disaster.

The investigators' preliminary conclusions were based on more than 15 hours of videotape taken by remote-controlled cameras of the wrecked ferry, which went down off the coast of Finland in a violent storm last Wednesday.

The video showed that the huge hinged door used for loading cars and trucks onto the ferry had "fully separated from the rest of the vessel," the investigators said in a statement. The door was not found.

The Estonia sank after an estimated 1,000 tons of water flooded the ship's car deck, said one of the investigators, Tuomo Karppinen of Finland.

The video pictures confirmed stories by survivors and speculation by experts that the huge front door had leaked or even broken off the ship during the storm. The video also showed a problem with the inner bow door, which doubles as a ramp that is lowered to let in vehicles.

The door is supposed to be watertight, but investigators said it had been partly dislodged, leaving a gap of about three feet along the top edge that allowed water to rush into the car deck.

The rush of water was "of sufficient magnitude to result in a lack of stability and the capsizing of the ferry," they said.

"Evidence points to the fact that there was something wrong with the doors before the ship left harbor."

"...the bow doors banged open, swung up and then banged down hard. This may have happened several times and the breaking of the locking devices would have made the banging sound."

The investigators said the inner door may have been jarred open further when the ship hit the sea bottom.

The statement, signed by the official Board of Inquiry, said "it is not possible to comment further on the reason" the locks failed. Karppinen said the evidence "points to the fact that there was something wrong with the doors before the ship left harbor."

The findings could be explosive for northern Europeans, who rely on cheap reliable ferry transportation. Experts have already called into question the design of the Estonia and similar ferries with large, movable doors that carry hundreds of cars and trucks in stormy seas.

Estline, the company that owned the ferry, said today it would permanently seal the bow door on the new ferry that will replace the Estonia.

Only 137 people survived when the Estonia capsized and sank while en route from Tallinn, the capital of Estonia, to Stockholm, Sweden. Memorial services for the dead were held Sunday in Sweden, Estonia and Finland.

More than half the victims were Swedes.

The remote cameras did not go inside the sunken ship, which is lying between 180 and 280 feet deep, and did not send back pictures of any bodies, investigators said. Authorities believe 912 people perished in the disaster, but only 93 bodies have been recovered.

Karppinen said the cameras searched the sea bottom in vain for the missing bow door. He speculated that during the storm, "the bow doors opened, swung up and then banged down hard. This may have happened several times and the breaking of the locking devices would have made the banging sound."

A number of survivors reported hearing loud crashes shortly before the Estonia sank.

PUPPETS: Arts endowment helps fund exhibit

$812,000 for the project. Malkin added that this is the first time the NEA has taken such an active role in puppetry.

"The puppets come from all over the world," Malkin said, as he used his museum-like office to point out different types of puppets that will appear at the exhibit.

Puppets from countries such as India, Turkey and Russia will be on display at the exhibit. Some of the puppets are controlled with string, while others are manipulated with rods.

A form of puppetry from the Asian and Australian cultures also will be featured. The form — shadow puppetry — is when puppets are displayed behind a fabric screen.

All of these different forms will be shown on video along with the puppet display.

Malkin finished the video in cooperation with Jim Hensen Productions — a company which interviews some of the most well-known puppeteers in the world. Among the featured artists is the unique style of Albrecht Roser of Germany and his mastery of string puppets. A shadow puppetry sequence from Richard Bradshaw shows comedy of puppetry in Australia.

Malkin credited most of the video to his son Josh Malkin. The photos were provided by Cal Poly's Richard Termine.

The designing of the logo and other video effects were perfected by Jennings who, among his other art, sports the exhibit logo on his office wall.

Jennings said the exhibit will be hands-on. Children also will have an opportunity to learn how to make a variety of puppets.

"The goal of the puppets is to provide an interesting, interactive experience for not only kids but adults as well," Jennings said.

Malkin has been working with puppets for a number of years. He started working with the NEA and writing the catalog for an international puppet convention in Washington, D.C. in 1980. Years later, he and 14 Cal Poly students coordinated an award-winning puppet show in Atlanta. Malkin worked on the project five years before actual production.

"I suggested someone else to be curator ... but I guess [NEA] had other plans," said Malkin, referring to his appointment as curator.

Malkin said he has learned a lot from this project and he was excited to be able to get Jennings into the works.

"The opportunity to work with Mike is the greatest motivation for me," Jennings said.

Malkin estimated construction of the exhibit will begin in February 1995. He also hopes what he deems an "odd little art form" will become less trivial to viewers.

He added that he hopes people begin to realize puppetry for its potential as a profound art.

"I ride my bike everywhere anyway, so I know it won't affect me," Habas said.

Computer science professor Gene Fisher rides his bike often and doesn't feel Rideshare week will change his routine.

"I have an unusual situation where I live in Arroyo Grande," Fisher said. "I usually drive to the airport, leave my car there and ride the rest of the way to campus."

"I couldn't ride today because I had some stuff I needed to unpack in my office."

To encourage people to take advantage of Rideshare Week, Paulsen said prizes will be offered in a drawing for those pledging to use alternative transportation this week. Participants can sign up on Wednesday at the RideShare booth in the University Union.

"By making a pledge to use another form of transportation to get to campus, participants are entered into a drawing for local and state prizes," Paulsen said. "Even if people just try to ride share once this week, they can sign up at our booth for the drawings."

"We're hoping it will make them realize how much they can save in gas, parking and wear and tear on their cars, as well as the good it does for the environment and all that good stuff."

Judge declares Hurley case a mistrial

Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — A judge declared a mistrial today after jurors said they could not decide if a motorist who collided with Sacramento Kings' guard Bobby Hurley was guilty of reckless driving.

Jurors said they deadlocked 10-2 in favor of convicting Daniel Wieland, 38. They got the case only last Friday, but Judge Roland L. Candee declared a mistrial, anyway.

Prosecutors did not say immediately if they would seek a new trial.

Wieland's station wagon collided with Hurley's four-wheel-drive vehicle last Dec. 12 on a dark roadway near Arco Arena following a Kings' game.

Hurley, who was not wearing a seat belt, was thrown from the vehicle and landed in a drainage ditch. He suffered broken ribs, lung injuries, a compression fracture in his back and other injuries.

Hurley and other witnesses testified that Wieland was driving without his headlights on, but Wieland denied it. His attorney contended that Hurley contributed to the accident by failing to make a full stop at the intersection where the crash occurred.

Wieland said outside the courtroom that he was disappointed. "I figured I would be acquitted, very much so," he said. "You can't go down that road without headlights on."

His attorney, Michael Brady, said the case should not have been brought to court in the first place.

"In my opinion he didn't violate the law," Brady said. "I apparently didn't do a very good job explaining the law to jurors."

Hockey owners ignore commish, pay big bucks

Associated Press

TORONTO — While NHL owners may be moaning about being poor, they sure aren't acting like it.

In the beginning of August, league commissioner Gary Bettman imposed economic rollbacks that saved owners at least $20 million. Since then, general managers have voluntarily spent more than 10 times that amount on long-term contracts.

Edmonton Oilers general manager Glen Sather suggests they should be whipped for their spendthrift ways.

It's been almost a week since the two sides have had any formal negotiations, and the lack of talks has frustrated some negotiators.

"Lock the doors, order the Chinese food," suggested Brian Burke, the NHL's vice president and director of hockey operations. "Nobody leaves until a deal's done. I'd love to do that."

Last Friday, the league postponed the Oct. 1 start of the season for two weeks and said play would begin Oct. 15 if there was a new contract or if significant progress toward one had been made. Neither the NHL nor the NHL Players' Association is expected to have a new proposal to offer when they meet Tuesday in New York to resume negotiations.

NHL players have only limited free agency because clubs retain the right to match offers or extract major compensation in most cases. This kept salaries low until a few maverick teams, led by the St. Louis Blues, started spending money on free agents that couldn't be matched.

In 1993-94, the average salary rose to $503,087 from $412,512. The number of players making $1 million or more grew from fewer than five just six years ago to 75.

Since Aug. 1, the signings have included:

— Paul Kariya of the Anaheim Mighty Ducks at $6.5 million over three years.

— Goalie Dominic Hasek of the Buffalo Sabres at $6.9 million for three years.

— Vince Damphousse of the Montreal Canadiens at $10 million over four years.

— Brett Lindros at $7.5 million for three years with the New York Islanders.

— Jaromir Jagr at $19.2 million for five years with the Pittsburgh Penguins.

"I don't mind paying star players," Edmonton owner Peter Pocklington said. "They're entertainers. But that does not mean the journeymen should share in the abundance if it is killing the goose which lays the golden egg."

A cursory look at an NHLPA salary list from Aug. 1 to Oct. 1 doesn't show very many journeymen players. It's doubtful players like Teemu Selanne and Keith Tkachuk of the Winnipeg Jets or Bill Ranford of the Oilers fit that bill.

Players acknowledge that their salaries have risen dramatically over the past four or five years.

NHLPA president Mike Gartner of the Toronto Maple Leafs said: "Revenues have continued to grow. Expansion teams have continued to bring in a tremendous amount of money for the league. I think it's a very healthy business."

Escalating salaries are front and center in the stalemate in negotiations.

"We need a player-employment system that avoids making this a league of haves and have-nots," wrote Bettman in a letter to players last Friday. "Unless we develop that type of system, our recent success will not solve our economic and competitive problems. This situation must be addressed, and addressed now."

The NHL proposes to tax a team's payroll as a means to raise revenues from small-market teams.

Athlete's civil rights case pending

By John Nadel

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Al Joyner recalls the scary incident of nearly 2 1/2 years ago vividly, which isn't a surprise since he remembers thinking he was going to die.

Joyner says he was terrorized by the members of the Los Angeles Police Department.

It was Friday, May 8, 1992. Joyner, who won the gold medal in the triple jump at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and was hoping to compete in the 1992 Games, was driving in Hollywood about 10:30 a.m. when he was pulled over by police.

Joyner, 34, believes he was stopped and treated improperly that day for only one reason — because he was a young black man driving a nice car.

"Every time I think about it, it scares me," Joyner said. "It put the living fear in me. I had just left the White House with the President of the United States, and two days later that happened. And I didn't do anything wrong."

"No matter how far you go, I'm still a black man and not a human being."

What happened that day triggered a civil rights action against the City of Los Angeles and several LAPD officers, including former chief Daryl F. Gates.

A trial is scheduled to start Tuesday in U.S. District Court.

According to the complaint, police stopped traffic in both directions on Sunset Boulevard and ordered Joyner from his car by loudspeaker, forcing him to kneel at gunpoint and handcuffing him in front of a numerous onlookers.

Police incorrectly ran his special Olympic license plate so that it came back registered to a pickup truck rather than the 1984 Nissan registered to Joyner's wife, the complaint says.

It also said that Joyner was never asked for his driver's license and registration, which would have shown the car's plates matched the vehicle.

Instead, he was treated as a "high-risk felony suspect," and the treatment caused him to experience "unbelievable humiliation and terror."

While Joyner was still handcuffed, the car's plates were finally run correctly. Joyner was then released without receiving any traffic citation or an apology, the complaint says.

According to the complaint, one of the police cars pulled Joyner over a second time a block away, allegedly to interrogate him as a suspect in a hit-and-run accident that occurred earlier in the day. The complaint says that was "to provide a cover for the first unlawful stop."

Although he was not handcuffed during the second stop, Joyner was detained "for no reason for another 15-to-20 minutes."

The complaint charges the officers involved "acted and conspired together in order to cover up the true facts" and made "false and misleading reports" on the incident.

Joyner didn't compete in the 1988 Olympics, instead training his wife, Florence Griffith Joyner, who dominated the women's sprints in those Games.

He was attempting a comeback in 1992, hoping to compete in the triple jump and 120-meter high hurdles.

"The dispute in this case is simply whether what they did cost Al an opportunity to compete in the 1992 Olympics," said John C. Burton, one of Joyner's attorneys. "They say it didn't, we say it did."

"... We think the damages should be in seven figures. Burton said that settlement talks haven't been successful."

Cmdr. Dave Gascon, chief spokesman for the Los Angeles Police Department, said he couldn't comment on the matter "because of pending litigation."
